Adaptive Imaging Technique: Breaking Through the Barriers of all Autism Spectrum and related issues of personal expression Richard Walba

The only autism/Asperger's intervention created by someone who is actually on the Spectrum them self, with all the insights of someone who is completely familiar with both worlds, neurodiverse and neurotypical. Richard Walba is also a board member and science officer of the Autism Society Mass Chapter. Adaptive Imaging Technique is a completely unique self-help intervention that is the first and currently the only intervention that not only addresses the needs of young children, through the development of its incomparably powerful Dynamic Parent/Child Relationship, but also provides a systematic and definite means to successfully transition high-functioning individuals into adulthood, and a real life, functioning seamlessly alongside their neurotypical peers.

AIT is a "Human Centered" approach to personal development, guiding and encouraging individual use of our human potential for creativity and adaptability. And to this end it is the only intervention that makes sophisticated use of Mental Imaging Technique, a science-based methodology that has been used successfully in other therapy and personal development fields, even in reversing the effects of TBI. Considered the most powerful tool for evoking "Brain Plasticity," it is absolutely essential to effectively and efficiently remediate the sensory processing and sensory integration issues that are at the core of autism, correcting attention issues and providing real-time sensory processing enhancement and speed. Another first, AIT is the only intervention that addresses the physical as well as cognitive issues, far better than conventional physical and occupational therapy, using a far more sophisticated approach to motor control and, again, through its sophisticated use of Mental Imaging Technique.

The path to all around personal development, and the kind of wonderful life that everyone aspires to, is now finally and truly as clear as black and white, and as easily followed as could ever be desired, and not just for those on the Spectrum but anyone who has issues with personal expression and functional difficulties in general. And this, of course, includes parents and caregivers of those in need here, along with therapists, teachers coaches, etc. Everyone wanting to improve the condition of themselves and others to the world around us.

"If it works for autism it will work for anybody."
