Zen's life was full. She was teaching dance, taking classes, writing provocative articles for Black Venue magazine and enjoying the attention of the uber handsome Jeffrey. But Jeffrey wanted to head in a direction she wasn't ready for. He had to understand she was a young eagle who had just been released from her endangered species status and she needed to soar. He was ...welcome to fly beside her, but she needed to remain cage free. She was living The Zen Life and could afford no distractions. Frieda wasn't having an easy pregnancy, she was well into her second trimester and was nauseous and weak but the one thing she never tired of was being loved by Charlie. He was proving to be a loving and attentive husband. She still had her fearful moments but overall she had never been more relaxed and was embracing happiness but being a birthday away from forty and pregnant was more than a bit daunting. Charlie took his growing celebrity in stride. He knew he was an excellent artist and there were those who truly were interested in the art. But, Charlie was nobody's fool. He knew that many of the locals who had once seen him walking the streets, embraced by his demons wanted to see if he were truly free or perpetrating. It caused him to smile inside and thank God because he knew the real perpetrator had been Crazy Charlie, Charlie Jones, husband father and artist was the real deal. Willie Mae had found a new zest for life. She had spent too many years trying to beat them but now in her newfound family life she was ready to join them. Her granddaughter had become her tutor and she was open to the lessons
