Sydney. The 'it' capital of Australia. Yet, Allison O'Connor wants nothing more than to escape from its grasps. The infamous Kings Cross bores her. And in order to stay clear of the lifestyle that slowly chokes her, she decides it's time to finally become an adult and move to Melbourne. It also means going after the one man that she can't quite forget. But in doing so, Ally soon discovers that moving to Melbourne could spark the biggest fight she's ever faced: The fight for Robert Moors' reluctant heart. Robert Moors has one thing on his mind: making the Australian National Rowing Team and with that, The Olympic Team. All he's done is train and ensure no distractions get in the way of achieving his dream. However, Fate has other plans. And her name, Allison O'Connor. The young socialite's all sorts of trouble that Rob and his image doesn't need. But staying away from her is a lot harder than he's ever imagined. She's everything he never knew he needed. And she's everything that could obliterate his career and his chance at The Olympics. They both have choices to make. But with all choices comes consequences. And some consequences will destroy everything they worked hard to create and call theirs.
