In Life's Endless Barter, There Are Debts To Be Paid... As Judy lay there, regaining her strength, pieces of recent events were slowly beginning to make sense. Judy was passing a local doorway at the side of a building when someone had grabbed her from behind. The assailant had roughly covered her mouth hard with his gloved hand. She attempted to scream but the obstruction made it difficult for her to breathe, much less let out a cry. She remembered the seemingly joyful noises and the screaming of others around her. The muscles in her arms ached under the resisting pressure but she was determined to see the face of the man who dared to lay his hands on her person. As they scuffled, Judy was able to rip free of his claws and turned herself about. For a moment that seemed like an eternity, Judy stared into the hollowed out eyes of the clown's mask which he had obviously wore to hide his face. Her soul cringed as she stared at the broad, ridiculing smile which was painted across the mouth area. Set within those lips were what appeared to be uneven, jaggedly sharp teeth. Though the reality held an unreal harshness, Judy knew that it was him, it could be no other. For the briefest of moments, she felt comfort in the hope that this was all a joke but as she stared at the ghastly smile, she realized that the demon was now ripping at her clothing. During the year 1843, in the beautiful and prospering state of Louisiana, many, including the Green family, seek honest and exciting opportunities. But there are those in the city of New Orleans that have needs and motivations which are a bit more on the insidious side. Young Judy, who possesses psychic abilities, feels driven to become a powerful spiritual figure. Secrets unfold as the line between truth and deception and good and evil find a home. The author, Lloyd Green, has previously written The Dream Dilemma and Reflections of EL: In Search of Self. He has a degree in psychology and loves his work as a videographer. The
