The emotions which drove him forward also pulled him back. He saw his behavior, stark and clear, where any step he took to the left or right would lead, and though couldn't stop from walking the path he'd chosen, he could, on the other hand, hold his passions in check. He wouldn't become "the other man." She was still, in many respects, living in a world made of sand, the castle she'd built for him and her subject to many outside elements, wind and rain and sun.

The day Marina Allenoy drove up to his artists' shop, Cristobel Wolfe knew something was wrong. If he's guessed correctly, she's married and also badly abused.

Yet, despite the risk, he can't seem to turn her aside. She's a lovely woman with a beautiful heart who simply needs a gentle hand to guide her.

Their growing feelings bring a new danger, however, both from her spouse, whose reputation is known in the community, and a long-held personal secret that could destroy their future, and the lives in the Wolfe family, forever.
