Who sank my destroyer?

That's a question the men who served aboard this great fighting ship have been asking for over 14 years. I can answer that question because I'm mostly responsible for it's sinking. Many Navy ships have been sunk either in battle or made into artificial reefs. The lucky ones became museums and the unlucky ones were turned into scrap and sold to foreign countries. That was not the fate of The USS Benjamin Stoddert, I made sure of that. Most people are not aware of the fact that Benjamin Stoddert was the first Secretary of The Navy, appointed by President John Adams. He held that office from 1798-1801. Some people can argue that he was the father of the US Navy. In any case that ship has a very storied past and was a very highly decorated one. It was the last combat ship to leave Viet Nam after so many years of fighting and the death and disablement of so many of our fighting men and women. I wrote this story because it is true and I was the last person to stand on her deck before she slipped beneath the waves of the Pacific Ocean on February 3, 2001. Buy this story and you will be getting a short history lesson but more importantly, you will be helping our Veterans. Every dollar in profit from this E Book will be donated to our Veterans.
